Hunger in Northern New Mexico

Hunger remains constant in the lives of many New Mexicans and is a growing crisis for families in Northern New Mexico.

Map the Meal Gap 2011 revealed staggering statistics relating to food insecurity in New Mexico. This study showed that 417,780 people, 1 in 5 New Mexicans, do not know where they will get their next meal. Children in New Mexico face an even more dire situation; 1 in 3 children in New Mexico are experiencing food insecurity right now. The life potential of 156,930 children is limited by a lack of access to food. Missing Meals in New Mexico discovered that low-income New Mexicans are missing 117,140,870 meals every year. This means that vulnerable families, children, seniors and individuals do not have enough food in their homes. For The Food Depot's service area of nine counties, nearly 16 million meals are missing.

Since the economic downturn, The Food Depot's partner agencies have averaged a 30 percent increase in the demand for emergency food assistance. As the economy worsens, working families are more and more at risk. For many, an unexpected car repair, an illness or an accident becomes a crisis, which forces them to choose between groceries and rent, utilities and health care.

In alignment with the national trend, The Food Depot's 145 partner agencies are consistently reporting increased numbers of clients. Hunger in America 2010, a landmark study released by the New Mexico Association of Food Banks (NMAFB) and Feeding America, the nation's largest domestic hunger-relief organization, reports that nearly 40,000 New Mexicans seek food assistance each week. Further, in 2009, Feeding America, The Food Depot's parent organization, increased the service area of the food bank by adding two counties. The food bank now serves the counties of Colfax, Harding, Los Alamos, Mora, Rio Arriba, San Miguel, Santa Fe, Taos and Union – more than 26,000 square miles, with a population in need of over 105,000 people.

Do you know someone who is experiencing hunger? The odds are that you do.

The Consequences of Hunger

The Food Depot addresses the most fundamental need of all people: food. For those who struggle with hunger, the effects are far-reaching and often difficult to see. Providing an individual who is hungry with food immediately impacts their capacity to be a contributing member of society.

Hunger and under nutrition contribute to a number of negative health consequences. According to the Food Research and Action Center's (FRAC) survey of families living below 185 percent of poverty, hungry children suffer from two to four times as many individual health problems, such as unwanted weight loss, fatigue, headaches, irritability, inability to concentrate and frequent colds, as low-income children whose families do not experience food shortages. Also, according to CCHIP, hungry children are more likely to be ill and absent from school.

FRAC maintains that hunger and malnutrition exacerbate chronic and acute diseases and speed the onset of degenerative diseases among the elderly. This not only leads to an unnecessary decrease in the quality of life for many older people, but also increases the cost of health care in the United States. National data for people ages 65 to 75 show that a majority are not consuming even two-thirds of the nutrients they need to stay healthy.

Typically, FRAC also reports that hunger and insecurity about whether a family will be able to obtain enough food to avoid hunger, also have an emotional impact on children and their parents. Anxiety, negative feelings about self-worth and hostility towards the outside world can result from chronic hunger and food insecurity.

Volunteer

Volunteer support is critical to our mission and makes us one of the most efficient charities around!

In fiscal year 2013-14, The Food Depot benefitted from 13,079 hours of volunteer time! We currently have 1,563 active volunteers, and we are always looking for more help.

Why do volunteers matter? Every hour of time that is given by volunteers means that more financial resources can be directed towards providing meals to people in need! Last year's volunteer hours saved The Food Depot over $250,000 — enough to provide a MILLION meals!
